(Special to The Evening World.) ALBANY, April 23 .- The Lexow Bi-Par tisan Police bill passed the Assembly of 96 to 21.

The New York City reformers made a mere pretense of a fight to defeat the bill, and substitute for it the Committee of Ten bill, creating a single-headed Commission, but they could not command votes enough. Although Leader Pavey made six speeches, he lost from two to four votes after each one of Mr. Pavey's Speech.

Mr. Pavey began his speech by saying:

"It is a theory of legislative procedure that bills of vital importance to the municipal administration of a great city ability from a Committee of this House unless they are asked for and advocated by at least some portion of the community which they are to affect; and yet these bills stand in exactly the property of the communities of the committee of the many such an upport or advocacy on the part of any of the committee, without any such an operation from New York City."

A Rap at Platt.

"First—Thomas C. Platt, of Tioga County, an acknowledged leader of the Republican machine in this State, but the poorest excuse for a statesman that the party has ever produced; devoid of party principle, indifferent to party honor, he has forfeited all claims to the confidence and respect of the party in the State, and especially in the City and county of New York.

Mr. Pavey referred to the work of the Lexow Committee, and said its conclusions were:

"First—That the police force of New York City was inefficient and corrupt."

"Second—That it was in need of prompt and thorough reorganization.

"Third—That the trouble was not of recent growth but had hated for some year."

E. C. Center, nephew of the dead man, testified that he had gone to the station in West Sixty-eighth street and requested that no complaint be entered against Winkler.

Coroner Hoeber then submitted letters from Mr. Teneyck, Clerk of the Board of Aldermen, and from Corporation Counsel Clark's office in reply to queries whether there were any regulations compelling drivers of wagons to always turn to the right in passing another vehicle.

He wanted Supt. Byrnes to tell his opinion at the hearing. No letter was received from the Superintendent.

Coroner Hoeber charged the jury. It consisted in telling what the law should be regarding the speed and conduct of drivers in passing other wagons in the streets.

The news was first made public on April 16, when three men who had been firemen on board the Orinoco went to the office of United States Commissioner Shields and informed him of the death of the fireman.

They said that during a row Soltau had struck Seeger on the head with a shovel, and that Seeger died from the effects of the blow. The Orinoco had already sailed when the information reached Commissioner Shields. Seeger's body was buried at sea.

Capt. P. J. Frazer was seen at the office of the agents, Outerbridge & Co., and made the following statement:

"About 11 o'clock on the morning of April 10 the chief engineer came up on deck and reported that one of the firemen was ill, and that two of the crew were bringing him on deck, as he was too weak to come up without assistance."

Fish and Foley Clash.

Foley attacked the bill on the ground that it violated the principles of home rule and was antagonistic to the motives of Mayor Strong. The whole purpose of the dominant party in the Legislature, he said, was apparently to snub and humiliate the Mayors of New York and Brooklyn.

The speaker denied this, and said the Ri-Partisan Police Board was not a violation of the home-rule principle, and that there was no attempt to snub or humiliate the heads of the two city governments.

The Speaker and Foley wrangled over the question of their individual and political belief. Neither said anything particularly new or interesting, but both became excited and contributed more entertainment than information about the bill or themselves.

Reform Leader Pavey made a last attempt to cripple the bill, moving to strike out the bi-partisan feature, but was voted down at the rate of about five votes to one.

He tried to make a speech every minute, but was cailed down to the five minute rule by Cutler, of Rockland, who was in the Chair and was evilage.
